

Secularism

So Rev. John Jenkins, C.S.C., the president of the University of Notre Dame, has completed the work of secularizing the university, a task begun when Rev. Theodore Hesburgh accepted Rockefeller money to build his library. Jenkins has caved into the sodomites and took refuge behind academic freedom, the usual hiding place of cowards who refuse to defend the Catholic faith and morality.

As Notre Dame moves closer to secularism can we expect to see the statue of Our Lady removed as an offensive object to the sodomites and those who demand academic freedom? Rev. Edward Sorin must be rolling over in his grave.

Thomas J. Miranda
Granger